The value of acute toxicity testing of pharmaceuticals for estimation of human response

Highlights

Acute oral LD50 of rats have poor correlation with the METD, and cannot be used as a classification criteria. Substances with very low therapeutic doses are not identified with the use of oral LD50. We propose that the acute toxicity based on rat LD50 dose is not used as a basis for classification of pharmaceuticals.

http://dx.doi.org/10.1016/j.yrtph.2012.01.005